Returning to the Workplace

Many companies are looking at strategies on how to return to the workplace.

Items to consider as you return to work*

- Does your current work environment support your employee's new work style?
- Consider flow, circulation, and boundaries
- Use Data - Talk to your teams to determine a plan
 - Identify how much in-person interaction is required per team
 - Survey your employees to understand the benefits and challenges they faced working remotely
- Integrate technology for seamless communication with remote workers and leverage scheduling tools to reserve shared spaces
- Learn more about the benefits of cleanable materials for a safe + healthy workplace

Have questions? We're here to help.

Employees are no longer solely remote or office-only, work is now a blend of both.

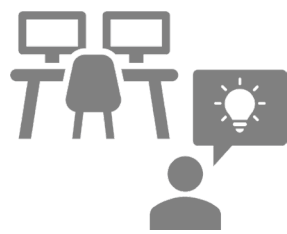

Distributed Working: People working across a variety of locations and even time zones.

Activities Every Office Should Support

Connection with Remote Workers

Spaces for Heads-Down, Concentrated Work

Collaboration Spaces for Teamwork

If you feel your space doesn't support these activities now, give us a call to discuss the best methods of integration.

Cleanable Materials

Tried and tested materials that have long been used in healthcare and higher education are adapting to commercial and communal spaces. Many manufactures offer bleach cleanable Vinyls, Polyurethanes, and Woven fabrics. Micro-care finishes can now be applied to laminates and soft seating to keep bacteria from spreading.

With access to all of our manufacturer's cleaning guides and capabilities, we can provide guidance on cleaning and upkeep.
